An enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA) was developed that permits rapid screening of marine sediments for the presence of anaerobic microorganisms. A solid-phase microtiter plate was sensitized with the immunogenic material of Streptococcus faecalis; this plate absorbed antibodies produced by a female New Zealand rabbit immunized with the microorganisms. Detection is accomplished by an EIA technique that uses antisera against S. faecalis, raffinose, sucrose, and arabinose. The assay is based on the principle that both proteins and enzymes involved in carbohydrate metabolism are more sensitive than the microbial cells themselves and are, therefore, released when the microorganisms are lysed. The probe used contained 18 C-radiolabeled carbohydrate moieties per molecule, one of which was sucrose, which provided both a specificity and a sensitivity of 2 to 5 micrograms/10 g sediment. The assay was successful for detecting S. faecalis in sediment mixed with 0.5% sterile saline, after a single 10-hour incubation at 26 degrees C. Viable counts were also determined and good agreement between the two assays was found in the samples. Tuesday, May 1, 2014 Packing Up and Moving It's May and Summer is around the corner. So, for me, it's time to do the one and only thing that all moms dread. Moving. Moving? ummm. Yes, my humble abode is to be relocated! First off, I want to say that I'm so excited. About moving. Maybe I have a thing for move related activities? Perhaps. Moving.
