My HTML code is, And my JS code is, `$(document).ready(function(){ $('.buttons input').on('click', function() { $(this).next().addClass('buttonActive'); $(this).removeClass('buttonActive'); }) });`
When clicking the buttons, it becomes active as expected. But, if I press the active button, it changes to the previous button's class, which is really weird. Here's the JSFiddle. A: Change this in your code: $(this).next().addClass('buttonActive'); to this: $(this).next().addClass('active'); Add active as a class to the active button and remove the class active from the previous button. JQuery class documentation Drug addicts relapse due to inadequate drug self-administration procedures. In this research, we will characterize critical components of the procedural variables which control the rates of self-administration behavior and self-administration reinforcer intake in rhesus monkeys and develop procedures to modify them. The determination of the influence of procedures and other factors on self-administration behavior will be accomplished by utilizing an operant system which permits rats to self-administer fluid in
