The effect of Helicobacter pylori infection on the irritable bowel syndrome: a systematic review and meta-analysis. Previous meta-analysis has found an association between Helicobacter pylori infection and irritable bowel syndrome (IBS). However, the results of this meta-analysis were based on studies with inconsistent definitions of IBS and uncertain methodological quality. We performed a systematic review and meta-analysis to synthesize the current literature. Relevant studies published in English before September 2011 were identified from MEDLINE and EMBASE. Studies meeting the following criteria were included: (1) included participants with upper gastrointestinal symptoms, (2) compared the prevalence of H. pylori in IBS and non-IBS cases and (3) used validated questionnaires to diagnose IBS. Standardized incidence ratios (SIR) with 95% confidence intervals (95% CI) were used to estimate the strength of the association between H. pylori infection and IBS. Twelve studies were included, including 1,584 IBS patients and 4,320 non-IBS patients. We found an overall association between H. pylori and IBS in the 12 studies (SIR = 1.44, 95% CI: 1.23-1.70). There was a significant association between H. pylori and IBS among patients with IBS-mixed (SIR = 1.79, 95% CI: 1.06-3.02), IBS-celiac (SIR = 1.54, 95% CI: 1.35-1.75), IBS-unspecified (SIR = 1.93, 95% CI: 1.43-2.58) and

IBS-refractory (SIR = 1.80, 95% CI: 1.38-2.34) but not in patients with IBS-diarrhoea (SIR = 1.23, 95

Spinal muscular atrophy (SMA) is an autosomal recessive neurodegenerative disease caused by mutations in the survival motor neuron 1 (SMN1) gene. The onset of the disease occurs at birth, and symptoms include decreased muscular strength, respiratory failure and paralysis. The copy number of the SMN1 gene (SMN2) directly correlates with disease progression. To date, only five gene therapy clinical trials have been conducted in patients with SMA. None have shown to be safe and they only resulted in limited efficacy. This review highlights the rationale for nonviral gene delivery approaches in SMA.The Hylin Project The Hylin Project is a long-term archaeological research project located in the Annville-Cleona area of Northumberland County, Pennsylvania. The project's goal is to recover and restore a series of hand-made structural-functional ceramic assemblages from the late prehistoric and early historic periods (c. 1000 BCE-1750 CE). The objective of the project is to contribute to a better understanding of late prehistoric and early historic period life in the Annville-Cleona area and through this, the study of the broader Late Prehistoric and Early Historic period in Northeastern North America.
