Q: Can't run Xorg or gparted or anything else when Ubuntu installs I installed Ubuntu 17.10 yesterday and I couldn't boot it normally. I had to press esc repeatedly to get to grub, I ran boot-repair then I rebooted but none of the options I have are there so I was stuck at the Linux startup screen. Then I tried running xorg or gparted to install all the updates, etc but it just sits there on black or greyed out screen and nothing happens (I can see it on CPU usage though). It can last for hours. I read all the solutions I could find on this forum but I still can't figure out how to fix this. A: I had the same issue on my end and I fixed it by first reinstalling the bootloader by running boot-repair. Then, once it was done, I restored my partition table by running the "testdisk" program. You can download it from here. After restoring the partition table, you may have to run grub2-install /dev/sda after the changes have been saved. After that, it should be able to load the OS normally. Q: Why is this question off-topic? Why is this question off-topic? It is a question about a book that I am reading, which is on-topic.
