More At: reflectometry ("XRR") is a technique used for measuring the thickness and/or composition profile of layers on surfaces, such as thin films on wafers used in the fabrication of semiconductor devices. Conventional XRR systems use an incident X-ray beam to illuminate a surface. A portion of the incident beam is reflected from the surface and scattered into a detector. The incident beam is usually generated using a dedicated X-ray generator, typically housed in a separate enclosure from the measurement device.
