Last Edit: A: We can not detect the type of file since you did not provide any informations about the content of the PDF file. First thing that will occur to me is that it is a "Text" PDF file. It might not be readable if we were to see the real content. Anyhow, what you are looking for is a List of Types. A list of all the types of the available formats. If you would like to know how to do it in the command line, you may run the `acroread` command which will show you all the available formats. If you have a more advanced version of Acrobat Reader, I suggest you use the `Object > Extract text` option to extract a text file. The next step is to open that text file and use the a text editor to fix the extension (.txt). For example, with Notepad++ you can use the Search and Replace options from the main menu to fix the extension. If you want to do it fast using Linux tools, I suggest you use the dump command from the coreutils package. For example: $ dump --headers 2
