Just place the product on the website and start it. It will ask you to submit your information or license key. You just have to complete it and that's it! Malicious apps packed inside Android apps are another problem. For instance, Trojanized apps inside apps downloaded from third party app stores can be used to view personal data, download additional software and place advertisements. "IBM's secret sauce is the ability to understand how apps behave in the cloud as well as how they behave in the end user's mobile environment, which we use to improve app performance," says Kenner. "This new solution is free for two years with a monthly service charge that reduces for active users. After two years, the customer has the option to purchase a subscription for access to the next generation of features." The final attack vector for Ransomware is document-based scams. These are scams where scammers send spam messages or Trojanized phishing emails promising goodies like money-back guarantees, and promising users will get rid of a problem only if they pay up. The honest people who send in cash get their money back, but the scammers get free products in return, typically through the postal service.
