though he considered himself to be mainly a painter, lived most of his life in the united states, and wrote his best-known works in english, kahlil gibran was the key figure in a romantic movement that transformed arabic literature in the first half of the 20th century. in fact, he is one of the few figures who bridged the worlds of arab literature and european romanticism. there is little doubt that the kahlil gibran who wrote his most famous works in the late 19th and early 20th centuries is the one who is most often considered the prophet of "the east". and yet, there is also no doubt that the gibran of the second half of the 20th century remains the author who is the most accessible. this second kahlil gibran, who has sold millions of books, is still the one who is best known among those who have become acquainted with his writings through lectures and seminars. in any case, gibran's appeal is not limited to the muslim world. it is also a good example of a western perception of islam, which is at odds with islam itself. such a perception, which is frequently seen in the west, is that islam is a religion that, in the name of god, rules over women. this perspective is not false, since the umma, or community of muslims, has the authority to legislate on the behaviour of women, and women are subordinate to the will of the umma. nevertheless, muslims themselves understand this as one of the signs of god's mercy, not as a curse. to better understand the number of translations, we need to look at the numbers of copies of kahlil gibran books in the world. this can be found in several places. the most reliable figure is from the library of congress in the united states, which estimates that about 4 million copies of the prophet (and other gibran books) are in circulation. this number increases by about 30-40% if we consider that 50% of the world's population is literate and more than 30% of the population is from the americas. this means that somewhere between 15 and 20 million copies of the prophet are in circulation.

but there is a limit to a man's strength. if he overcomes this limit, the limit to him is god. you think your struggle is the most difficult struggle, you are wrong. do you know what is your struggle compared to that of a tree which grows naturally in the forest? the struggle of a lion is something that is lived as destiny. if a tree were to get a wound, even if it had no remedy, it would never stop growing. kahlil gibran also said that " the devil is present in your love, and to love means to despair."

in fact, there are others who say that, there is an angel in your heart; the devil is in your love; a pearl in your heart; the love of a saint; it is the voice of god in you. the need to write was a kind of creative necessity for me. i don't know if my first work was poetry; i started as a writer. this story is based on my observation of the love and pain of my parents and grandparents who lived in a small anatolian village of akdamar. lets start with gender. by analyzing the publication and the dissemination of the prophet, we found it was a very gendered work! according to our analysis, women were more likely to read the prophet than men (though men read significantly more of his poems), and men were more likely to be its primary readership. yet they also knew, and could have easily shared, large sections of the book through the translation network (we did not investigate the dominant language, malay, but would be willing to bet that english translations circulated alongside the arabic). to answer those who say "why should i read a book when i could watch a film?" we first note that if you look at the top five publishing country of the prophet, the top two include thailand and malaysia. given that thailand and malaysia are both muslim countries that place a premium on men learning women's roles in islam, it is a fair assumption to say that a large number of muslims also read the prophet. indeed, we found that if you are a muslim living in the world's most popular countries, you are likely to have read or know of at least one translation of the prophet. 5ec8ef588b
